

ROBIN PAGE ARNOT

Robin Page Arnot, who died on 18 May, aged ninety five, was one of that band of enthusiasts who, meeting on 10 October 1953, agreed to form the William Morris Society. He was for many years an active member of our Committee, wrote and spoke frequently on Morris, and was his most ardent champion. A longer note on his life has already appeared in our Newsletter. In paying tribute to him in the Journal, we offer members this portrait of him at the moment when, in 1912, he began work with G. D. H. Cole in the just-founded Fabian Research Department. In spirit, he was never a day older than this, however full he came to be of years and wisdom. To nobody has the memory of William Morris, and the life of the Society, owed more.
