

CONTRIBUTORS TO THIS ISSUE

When Geoffrey Tillotson died eighteen years ago, he was at work on a never-completed book on English Nineteenth Century Writers. We publish this passage on William Morris, never revised by the author but edited by Peter Faulkner, by the kindness of Kathleen Tillotson, a member of the Society.

Helen Irving is a graduate student in History at the University of Sydney: she is a member of the Society.

Lesley Baker, an English member of long standing, also now works in Australia.